As time wore on she could not leave her bed. She was conscious of her surroundings even to the hour of her death, but always secretly thought she would recover and be able to support her children.

No one ever called at the house except a farmer who, on the 10th of September, came to the door of the house and found her dead. One of her friends sent her a case of wine, but her stomach refused the nourishment and the bottles, save one, are unbroken. The house is off the road and the private way leads through wooded hills and dales, full of rain-washed gullies and fallen trees. The house is in sight from the roadway.

Beside the two-story frame house was a tiny, old-fashioned house, with a porch. The porch of the house was the dining room and library. The library is bare of furniture almost and suggests a place where a person would sit and read. The porch of the house was the dining room and library. The library is bare of furniture almost and suggests a place where a person would sit and read.

Yesterday her emaciated form was placed in a cloth-covered coffin and borne out of the door by her husband and son and the undertaker. An old-fashioned hearse, with which were harnessed two bony horses, stood before the door awaiting the burden. There were no plumes, no gloves, no mourning bands, only the plain hearse and one carriage. The little procession had to move slowly over the bad road. Further down the road a farmer and his wife joined the procession.

Later, two plain pupils in a carriage appeared. This was the funeral procession of the woman whose voice had charmed two continents. When the hearse reached the door of the Catholic Church in Plainfield only three of the mourners could be found to act as pall bearers, and the undertaker impressed three other men standing near by. One was Patrick Lynch, a cabman; one was a machinist named Gallagher, and the third was a reporter.

When the mass was about to be begun it was found that no one was present in the choir to sing the responses. Some one hurried out and caught a train. They knew Jeanne good-by. The funeral was held in the city of New York, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

The pall bearers carried the coffin out through the side doors and placed it in the hearse. A delay followed. Two of the women wished to catch a train. They knew Jeanne good-by. The funeral was held in the city of New York, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

There were five charges made by the prosecution. The first charged Antonio Ezeta and Juan Cienfuegos with the murder of Col. Tomas Canas. The testimony was that Canas was killed by Ezeta's troops, and that Cienfuegos was the one who shot him. The funeral was held in the city of New York, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

The second charge was that Juan Cienfuegos had attempted to kill Antonio Ezeta, a member of the La Libertad, on Jan. 3, several months before the revolution. The testimony was that Cienfuegos had been directed by Ezeta to protect Manuel Canas, between whom and Antonio Ezeta there existed a personal feud. The funeral was held in the city of New York, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

The third charge was that Gen. Antonio Ezeta had robbed the International Bank of Salvador and Nicaragua of $2,000. The testimony was that Ezeta had been directed by Cienfuegos to obtain funds from the bank for military purposes and a receipt given for the same. The funeral was held in the city of New York, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

The fourth charge was that Ezeta had been guilty of the murder of a man named Canas. The testimony was that Ezeta had been directed by Cienfuegos to obtain funds from the bank for military purposes and a receipt given for the same. The funeral was held in the city of New York, and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

JUDGE MORROW DECIDES IN FAVOR OF THE SALVADOR REFUGEES.

The important extradition case settled in the Court today was the case of Gen. Ezeta and other Salvadoran refugees, accompanied by an exhaustive opinion. Gen. Antonio Ezeta, Gen. Bolanos, and Major Bustamante are discharged, the Court deciding that no legal ground exists upon which they can be held for extradition, as the crimes charged against them were of a political and martial character. Col. Colococho was discharged at the conclusion of the trial and the day was not without an event. Ezeta, Bolanos, and Major Bustamante are discharged, the Court deciding that no legal ground exists upon which they can be held for extradition, as the crimes charged against them were of a political and martial character.

The case will become a precedent in extradition matters, doubtless, and it has caused the Administration much concern. The revolution which resulted in the overthrow of the Ezetas started in Salvador in April last. The revolution of 1890 had placed them at the head of the Government. Gen. Carlos Ezeta being elected President and his brother, Gen. Antonio Ezeta, Vice-President. The latter, a brave and successful soldier, was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army. The late revolt, headed by three officers of the army, Gutierrez, Ulandin, and Galan, was begun at Santa Anna on April 1, a state of siege was at once proclaimed, and the Government made strenuous efforts to put down the rebellion. On May 3 Gen. Antonio Ezeta, while leading his troops, was wounded. He was reported dead, and for several weeks it was generally believed that he had been killed. He had been carried off to the house of a friend and concealed, and after three weeks he was able to resume the command of his forces. He fought his way to La Libertad, on the western coast, where he arrived on the afternoon of June 6, pursued by the victorious revolutionists.

The United States gunboat Bennington was stationed at that time at La Libertad. Commander Thomas, in reply to a signal from the American Consul, asking if he would receive Gen. Ezeta aboard the Bennington and grant him an asylum until the arrival of the Pacific Mail steamer San Blas, which was expected in a few days, bound for Panama, signalled back that he would receive the General. Later in the afternoon he also took aboard the Bennington the other two revolutionists, General Bolanos and Major Bustamante, who were being pursued by their enemies, and afforded them asylum. The revolutionists at once demanded the surrender of the refugees, which Commander Thomas refused; but when the San Blas arrived a few days later he decided, after consultation with the American Consul, to send the Salvadorans until the arrival of the next steamer. Meantime he received orders from Washington to hold the prisoners.

Gen. Carlos Ezeta, the President, convinced that further opposition to the revolution would be useless, fled from the country on June 4, on a German ship, and found refuge in Panama. He reached New York about the middle of the month, and was received by the American Consul. He was then taken to the Hotel Bennington, where he was held under guard. The Bennington left La Libertad for Mare Island on July 25, stopping en route at Acapulco, Mexico, on July 31.

At the request of the refugees, Commander Thomas was directed to Washington to demand the release of the Salvadoran revolutionists. The latter, through Dr. Gomez, represented by the American Consul, demanded the extradition of the refugees, on the charge of "conspiracy to overthrow the Government of the United States." The American Consul, Mr. Horatio S. Rubens and Mr. Gonzalo de Quesada of the United States Government, were directed to demand the extradition of the refugees, on the charge of "conspiracy to overthrow the Government of the United States."

Upon their arrest the Salvadorans were taken before Judge Morrow in the United States District Court in San Francisco, and after a preliminary examination the hearing on the extradition of the refugees was set down for Sept. 4. This was continued until four days later, when the hearing was held. The case was argued by the prosecution and the defense. The prosecution argued that the refugees were guilty of the crimes charged against them, and that they should be extradited. The defense argued that the refugees were not guilty of the crimes charged against them, and that they should be released.

and beyond the jurisdiction of any civil tribunal? third, should the acts of violence charged in the complaint, if they were committed by the revolutionists, be considered as described in the treaty? The court held that "if, as argued by counsel for the Provisional Government, committing magistrates in cases of this kind did not recognize the political character of the acts, they would be taking from the Judiciary of the United States the protection of the liberty of the individual." It is provided in the treaty between the United States and Salvador that offenses of a political character, i.e., association with the revolution, shall not be extraditable. The crimes charged against the refugees were committed during a civil war, and were therefore of a political character. The court held that the refugees were not guilty of the crimes charged against them, and that they should be released.

HE ACCUSES GERRY AGENTS.

Mr. Freeman says they are presenting him because he wouldn't bribe them. Walter B. Freeman, the electrical engineer who was arrested some time ago on a charge of assisting in the sale of stolen goods, is now in the hands of the law. He is accused of presenting himself to the police and offering them a bribe to release him. The police refused the bribe, and Freeman was arrested. He is now in the hands of the law, and is accused of presenting himself to the police and offering them a bribe to release him.

When the case came up yesterday Freeman said that the papers in question were several hundred thousand dollars' worth of stock in the La Paz Mining Company, and that they had originally been with his other letters and papers in the flat which he had occupied at the time of his arrest. Mrs. Field had another flat in the same house, and Freeman claims that during his absence he had taken the papers, which he went to get the papers, he says, Mr. Field told him that Agents Deubert and Stocking of the Gerry Agency had taken them when they took his letters. "Afterward," said he, "I sent a friend around to Mr. Field because I discovered that the Gerry agents had not touched anything but the letters, and to get the papers, he says, Mr. Field told him that Agents Deubert and Stocking of the Gerry Agency had taken them when they took his letters."

On the night I was arrested that the Gerry agents made me understand that if I had money enough I could buy my discharge, and that if I had no money I would be discharged anyway, as I had plenty of proof that the charge against me was only an attempt at blackmail. I was then discharged, and I have been doing their best to annoy me, and make it as difficult as possible for me to make out my case. They fixed things so that I was arrested that I had to spend three days in jail before I could get bail. I was then released, and I have been doing their best to annoy me, and make it as difficult as possible for me to make out my case. A TROLLEY CAR IN PERIL. A spark from the motor starts a gas explosion and empties the Car. Passengers on a crowded De Kalb avenue trolley car, in Brooklyn, had a startling surprise about 9 o'clock yesterday morning. In the night there had been a big leak in the gas main at Myrtle and Washington avenues, and a gang of workmen had been engaged in repairing it during the morning. The excavation which they had dug was directly under the track of the De Kalb avenue line, and just as the car passed over the hole there was a loud explosion, followed by a rush of flames in the air and along the track.

The motorman was cool and ran the car a safe distance from the blaze before stopping it. The passengers, who were not hurt, were frightened and shaken up, all jumped off, thinking that the explosion had occurred on the car. The fire, however, was extinguished by the fire department, and the car was not damaged. The explosion was caused by a spark from the motor starting a gas explosion, and the car was emptied. The passengers were not hurt, and the car was not damaged.

Heid in $10,000 Bail. In the Essex Market Police Court yesterday Justice Simms held Edward Daly, William B. McCarthy, and Edward L. Carey in $10,000 each for examination to-morrow. Lawyer House of Friend & House denounced the Justice's action as an outrage, and at once served a writ of certiorari on him. The men are charged with having been implicated in the shooting of Michael Welch early last Tuesday morning. The detective who has the case in hand has been unable to produce any other evidence against the defendants than the fact that they were present at the time of the shooting. Welch does not know who shot him, but says that McCarthy does. The defendants are all having some shooting, but say they don't know who did it.
